User Query :

I paid ₹1,20,000 as an advance for a second-hand car advertised online. The seller sent photographs of the vehicle, an identity document and what appeared to be registration papers. After receiving the money, the seller stopped responding. I later discovered that the vehicle belonged to another person and that some of the documents had been altered. What legal provisions may apply?

APPLICABLE SECTIONS

Section 66D

— Punishment for cheating by personation by using computer resource

Applies if the online seller actually impersonated the vehicle owner or another person through the digital transaction.

Section 66C

— Punishment for identity theft

Applies only if another person's password, electronic signature or unique identification feature was fraudulently used.

INTERPRETATION & LEGAL ANALYSIS

AI-generated legal interpretation

- 1 The online medium alone does not create an unauthorised-access offence. The selected provisions depend on proof of personation or protected-identifier misuse.

✓ STRENGTHS & RIGHTS

- 1 The transaction was conducted online and included identity/registration documents.

✗ RISKS & OBLIGATIONS

- 1 Do not recharacterise generic cybercrime provisions as document-forgery provisions.
